29. - 31. soruları aşağıdaki parçaya göre cevaplayınız.

With the creation of central banks, currency underwent several significant changes. During both the coinage and credit money eras the number of entities which had the ability to coin or print money was quite large. One could, literally, have "a license to print money" and many nobles had the right of coinage. Royal colonial companies, such as the Massachusetts Bay Company or the British East India Company could issue notes of credit - money backed by the promise to pay later, or exchangeable for payments owed to the company itself. This led to continual instability of the value of money. The solution was the creation of a central monetary authority which had a virtual monopoly on issuing currency, and whose notes had to be accepted for "all debts public and private". The creation of a truly national currency, backed by the government's store of precious metals, and enforced by their military and governmental control over an area was at first extremely controversial, and many noblemen and businessmen protested against it.

29. As stated in the passage, prior to the creation of central banks ----.

- A) money was only available in the colonies
- B) governments were the only groups that could issue money
- C) the nobility opposed the government's right to issue money
- D) many different groups could issue money
- E) only the nobility could issue money

30. We can infer from the passage that one advantage of central banks is ----.

- A) they helped private companies issue their own money
- B) they broke the ties between business and the nobility
- C) they made the value of money more consistent over time
- D) they completely stopped fluctuations in the value of money
- E) they increased the value of money up to a certain level

31. According to the passage, national currencies are backed by ----.

- A) a wellknown coalition of businessmen and nobles
- B) some highly developed central banking systems
- C) funds from the colonies associations of different cultures
- D) precious metals owned by the government
- E) precious metals in the hands of private companies

No one knows when folktales began. Long before there was a written language, people gathered to praise their heroes, to exchange their sorrows and joys, and to wonder aloud about things they did not understand. Out of this folk talk, grew stories that were kept alive by poet-storytellers who wove them into songs and chants. Much later, many of these songs and stories were collected and written down. Since no true folktale is the creation of any one person, none of these tales had an author. Folktales are still in the making. A thousand years from now, stories of unidentified flying objects and beings from outer space may enchant a generation of children who will know many things that we now wonder about. Folktales are still being discovered, too, especially in remote regions of Africa, Southeast Asia, and other parts of the world.

32. According to the passage, the first folktales ----.

- A) were customarily created by a single person, but sung by many
- B) were told by many people to hail their heroes
- C) were first written down to praise heroes of the history
- D) told the stories of human origin everywhere in the world
- E) aimed to teach people the history and the culture of humanity

33. It is pointed out in the passage that it is not possible for us to know ----.

- A) if modern folk tales are true and telling something
- B) what will happen in the near future of the humanity
- C) if unidentified flying objects are real or imaginative
- D) the one who created the folktales and so the writer
- E) if the folktales we now know have changed in time

34. The writer of the passage imagines a generation thousand years later from now that ----.

- A) knows better than us but doesn't have any culture
- B) flies with spaceships to the outer world for new planets
- C) will know of today's stories such as UFOs
- D) comes from outer space for the invasion of the world
- E) loses its interest in folktales and will never know of

In some countries, it's not easy to get meat. That's why black beans are primary source of protein minerals and vitamins in developing countries. However, beans are hard to digest. One solution is to ferment them with two strands of common bacteria. Fermentation means allowing natural bacterial cultures to develop and break down the raw food. This frees up many more nutrients and makes beans easier to digest. Scientists in Venezuela have shown that fermenting beans reduces the number of indigestible compounds. Such lactic acid bacteria are already used to help create products like yoghurt. In the case of beans, Lactobacillus casei and Lactobacillus plantarum combine to remove fibers and make more nutrients available, according to the research presented in today's Journal of the Science of Food and Agriculture.

35. The writer points out that one of the reasons people eat beans is ----.

- A) they contain fibres which are healthy for the body
- B) that they don't have too many nutrients
- C) that they are very expensive
- D) because they are available in the absence of meat
- E) research shows that they are healthier than meat

36. The point is made in the passage that beans are hard to digest ----.

- A) and therefore aren't as common as meat in the developing countries
- B) unless they are eaten with some dairies such as yoghurt
- C) although it is possible to reduce the number of indigestible compounds
- D) because they contain bacterial cultures that make them hard to digest
- E) even if they are fermented with some traditional additives

37. The writer feels that bacteria can help people's bodies get the nutrients from beans ----.

- A) and suggests swallowing large amounts of bacteria along with the beans
- B) adding that bacteria are already used to make food products that are healthy
- C) which are the most indigestible source of protein known to man
- D) but warns us that these bacteria are also potentially dangerous
- E) although this might make them harder to digest

The demand for fresh fish in homes and restaurants around the world is soaring at a time when well-established fisheries are becoming exhausted. To meet the demand, fishing boats are venturing into farther reaches of the ocean, guided by high-tech devices that include technologies originally developed for the Cold War. The sophisticated equipment makes it possible to scope out fish and cast nets with greater accuracy, even in areas that in the past were difficult to trawl. As a result, many deep-water species are being fished so heavily that they could soon reach the point of no return. Citing the findings of a recent survey of North Atlantic fisheries, the scientists warned that stocks of highly favoured fish such as cod, tuna, haddock, flounder, and swordfish could disappear from plates within a decade if these species continue to be fished at present levels.

38. Many species of fish are becoming extinct because ----.

- A) the fishes can not find nutrients they need
- B) fishers are under the great impact of the Cold war
- C) in the past some areas were difficult to trawl
- D) fishers can trawl the deepest parts of the water with high tech devices
- E) fishers are using the technologies before the Cold War

39. High technology is used in fishing in order to meet ----.

- A) the increasing need of the people eating fish at homes and the restaurants
- B) the scientists who are against fish products and fishing
- C) the findings of the survey through the years of fishing
- D) the stocks of highly favoured fish and some species that are not fished
- E) the demands of the soldiers on duty especially when they are alerted

40. Which of the following could be the best title for the passage?

- A) The Outside Effects Influencing Fishery Laws
- B) A Brief Survey O The Coastal Fishery
- C) High-tech Fishing Is Emptying Deep Seas, Scientists Warn
- D) The Main Threat To The Blue Fin Tuna Is Over-fishing.
- E) The Laws Of Freshwater And Deep-sea Fishery

In the past, clothes as symbols of power and authority were particularly important. During the Middle Ages, European kings and princes had created laws to classify society. These included restricting the type of materials that could be worn with the royal family only being allowed to wear the rarest, most expensive items. The 16th century, "rising from the ashes of the Middle Ages," glowed with splendid fashion. A new world of wealth and learning was unfolding and consequently there were changes in fashion. The royal courts attracted "wasps and butterflies" hoping to gain a position in the royal circle. The court was exceedingly important to the monarch and at this time it would not be thought possible to function without it. It was at the royal court that the most significant and ceremonial festive occasions occurred and it has been said that "in such ceremonies does the art of good government much consist".

41. According to the passage, in the past, clothes ----.

- A) which were very expensive were worn only by the king
- B) were much more expensive than they are in today's world
- C) could generally symbolize social status of a person
- D) worn by the royal family in the Middle Ages were very simple
- E) of all kind were made of expensive handmade materials

42. One can understand from the passage that the classification of society ----.

- A) attracted insects to the courts of Middle ages
- B) only occurred during the Middle Ages especially in Britian
- C) brought clothing, its production and the fashion to new levels
- D) was enforced by some laws about clothes
- E) had nothing to do with the clothes people wore

43. The passage is mainly about ----.

- A) the importance and the symbolic value of clothes in history
- B) the difficulties faced in the Middle Ages' fashion world
- C) the classification of materials used for making clothes
- D) the fashion as a modern art of 20th century world
- E) the rules those attending to ceremonial festive occasions should obey

Ms Özdamar is a brave writer and this novel, written with a language which she has made her own, carries the passionate conviction that it matters how we live and that fiction can help us live better. The bridge in the novel is that on the "European" side of Istanbul. The heroine crosses to this side every day, during the years after her return, from her parents' home on the "Asian" side. She does not betray her homeland but forces it to accept her newly found freedom. So through the struggles of her heroine, Ms Özdamar drafts a future and a better reality, for herself and for anyone else to whom it matters.
